

This micrograph shows a histological section of the choroid. The choroid plexus is visible at the top, characterized by its highly convoluted, folded appearance. Below it, the choroid is composed of a dense network of blood vessels, including arteries and veins, which are surrounded by a layer of choroid plexus epithelium. The overall structure is highly vascularized and complex.

Figure 2

023070-121700US

Figure 3

